Invitation for Contributions to the Journal of Population Economics
30th Year Anniversary Volume

In 2017, the Journal of Population Economics will celebrate 30 years of dedication to publishing excellent theoretical and applied research in all areas of population economics. In commemoration of this milestone, the Editors would like to invite outstanding contributions on topics relevant to all areas of the economics of population, household, and human resources. The aim of this Anniversary Volume is to feature articles which best exemplify the field in terms of innovative, insightful, and influential research.

We welcome original research articles on pivotal topics in the field; evaluations of relevant programs, projects, and policies; literature reviews; and perspectives on how the field should and will develop in the future. As articles included in Volume 30 are expected to be widely read and highly cited, the Editors hope that the prestige and honor of being included in the Anniversary Volume will motivate talented scholars to send their best work to the Journal. Submitted papers will undergo the standard rigorous editorial and review process.

Volume 30 will consist of 4 issues, with 10 papers per issue. Because issue 1 of Volume 30 will appear in Fall 2016, to be considered for publication in the first two issues, the manuscripts should be submitted in Fall 2015. Manuscripts for issues 3 and 4 of Volume 30 can be submitted by early 2016. Editors reserve the right to allocate submissions to the appropriate issue. Submissions that cannot be accepted for publication in the Anniversary Volume may nevertheless be published in a regular Journal volume. Authors should note in their cover letter that they would like their submissions to be considered for publication in the 30th Anniversary Volume.

The Journal’s success over time is evident from the increase in its Impact Factor, which tripled within a decade, reaching 1.47 in 2013.
